REPORT.

The undersigned begs to offer the following as the first Triennial Report of Class 1869.

He would respectfully, but most earnestly, call the attention of the members to the importance of sending due information to the Secretary of their occupation, from time to time, and to any events in their lives, of interest to their classmates.

The Secretary can only make his report in so far as this has been complied with, and to neglect of it, in a degree, must be attributed many of the inaccuracies which, he fears, will be found in the following pages.

The attention of those members connected with the class, but who did not graduate, is asked to the inquiries of the Secretary. He thinks that every year increases their wish to maintain the associations with those their former classmates, and feels sure that they will be gladly welcomed and expected at all the class-meetings.

By "no account received" is meant, in answer to last two circulars, and the Secretary has depended on his personal knowledge. By "no account since graduation in July, 1869," that I have heard nothing from or of the fellows since that time.

All other reports are, as far as possible, a copy of the letters received in answer to the circular.

The class has met each Commencement at Cambridge; last year, Holworthy 19 was open for its use, and nearly 50 members were present.

A report of the condition of the Class Fund is submitted; circulars have been duly issued, calling for the several instalments as they have become due.

No application has been made for the Class Cradle.

The Class Supper is to be held on June 25th, at the United States Hotel.

The undersigned trusts the coming three years may be those of success to every member, and that it may be his pleasant duty to again meet all in 1875.

THOMAS P. BEAL,
Class Secretary.

Boston, June 15, 1872.

CLASS OF 1869.

One member of the graduating class has died during the past three years, James P. Whitney.

He was spending a few weeks at Narragansett Pier. On Monday, September 4, he was attacked by some internal trouble, and died on the following Wednesday. His funeral took place from Boston, September 9, 1872.

A meeting of the Class, to take appropriate notice of this sad event, was held at the Parker House, on September 11, when the following resolutions were adopted: —

"HARVARD COLLEGE, CLASS OF 1869.

"God, who chasteneth where he loveth most, has taken from us our friend and classmate,

"JAMES PHINEAS WHITNEY.

Believing that from his hand come every joy and sorrow, let us thank him that his infinite love has given us this example of a generous, manly, and devoted life.

"Let us remember, with pride and affection, the true and noble heart that gave its strength and tenderness to every suffering, the entire unselfishness and rare generosity that won and held our hearts, the honor that knew no word of calumny or falsehood, the singleness and energy of purpose that never failed in honorable cause, the loyalty and whole-hearted affection that only his mother, to whom he gave it, can fully know.

"For her, his truest mourner, we ask that strength which comes from Him who alone has power to comfort, and we ask her to receive from us, who loved him, that true and honest sympathy which he was always first to give.

"(Signed) "J. W. McBURNEY,
"Chairman.

"B. L. M. TOWER, Secretary."

Two members of those connected with the Class, not graduated, have died during the past three years — W. H. Hodges and Louis Thies.

E. T. Hodges, Esq., father of our classmate, sends the following letter, in answer to my inquiries in regard to his son's death : —

"After leaving his class he entered upon the study of medicine in the spring of 1867, and continued until June, 1871, when he received the degree of M.D. at Harvard Medical School. During his professional studies, he for one year filled the place of Professor of French and Drawing in the Military Institute of Kentucky. With a strong predilection for art, he had for some years, and especially after leaving his class, given earnest attention to music and painting; and so potent was his love for these arts, in November, 1871, he went to Milan to avail himself of the teachings of Italian masters. His purpose, for the most part, was to cultivate himself as a tenor, to which he had been very earnestly urged by accomplished amateurs and experienced professors. He was making encouraging progress under the great master, Perrini, when, about March 1, he was seized by a typhoid and a miliary fever. His strong vitality enabled him to resist these diseases, so fatal and malignant in Milan in March, much longer than common; but after weeks of struggle he died on the 11th April. We are assured that his last days were passed without pain, and that he was surrounded by friends who were anxious to render his sickness as comfortable as possible."
